

The Mathare houses are made of cheap materials like sticks, stones, polythene papers, bags and metal tins. To stick them together they use mud. The biggest house is 8 feet by 8 feet, where a family of seven to ten lives and one room is partitioned by bed sheets. Apart from that the slum looks good. (Beldine Achieng, 14)

---

These children were very excited when they saw the Shootback group walking along with their cameras and taking photos. It was amazing to them, one of them told me, since they had never seen youth taking pictures in such a way. Only tourists are the ones who come to the slum to take photos. (Beldine Achieng, 14)

---

Mathare United, the slum football team. Joy after winning the Kenyan Cup. (Mohammed Dahir, 17)

These two young children are trying to make fun by wearing caps made of aluminium and plastic. I interviewed them and their ambition is to become designers. (Saidi Hamisi, 15)

---

This man was so drunk he decided to take a nap on garbage, under the care of a goat. (Joseph Mulei, 16)